演題 Title	Lessons learned from bench to bedside: my journey as a physician-scientist
講師等 Presenter	Prof. John Yung-Chong Kao Division of Gastroenterology and Hepatology, Department of Internal Medicine, University of Michigan.
概要 Abstract	With increasing demands on physicians' time devoted to clinical care and a shrinking pool of research funding, there has been a steady decline in the number of physician-scientists. This trend has led some to question the value of having physicians engage in basic and translational research. The goal of this presentation is to share my journey as a physician-scientist, where I dedicate 80% of my time to bench research and 20% to clinical care. I will discuss how valuable insights gained from my patients have generated testable hypotheses, leading to new ideas for patient care. Specifically, I will explore the role of gut microbiota in health and disease, including the use of fecal microbiota transplantation as live biotherapeutics.
